

Splash Car Wash continues expansion with new Connecticut location

The brand has two more car washes nearing completion and has nine more to be completed or to start construction.

Splash Car Wash announced the opening of its 58th site, a new express wash located in Milford, Connecticut, where the company is headquartered.

While the brand has two new Upstate New York washes nearing completion in Oswego and Leray, the latest location has been completed and open to the public. The car wash is equipped with a 130-foot conveyor tunnel, 18 free self-service vacuum stations and a free mat cleaning room.

More developments are beginning construction next month, including sites in Henrietta, Clay, Fayetteville and Hamburg. In addition, construction continues as planned in Randolph, Massachusetts and Derby, Connecticut with anticipated openings in early September.

"This is my favorite wash development to date given the number of unique features we added to the site. Our goal is always to find new and improved ways to better serve our customers. I'm most excited about the customer-focused features added to the tunnel, such as the 'hot room', designed to better dry customer cars," stated Glen Sheeley, Director of Development and Construction at Splash, referring to the latest opening..

Furthermore, new site developments in Shelburne and Rutland, Vermont are expected to open mid-to-late fall. The two Vermont washes are being developed under the oversight of Aaron Vincelette, one of Splash's development partners.
